A THRILLING ADVENTURE. "Wilt Thou ?"

Win thou stand by me through life, Lady mine? Will thou pour the tranquil river Of thy life feto mine, that surges, ever Whose with strife? Will thou, open-hearted giver, Give thyself, to fall me never, Friend and wife ! Cooler pulse in life's long faver, Loftier soul for high endeavor, Mine by time time can not sever,

Share with life's gall and wine,

Lady mine ! Wilt thou stand by me through wee, Lady must When the dreary winter brings Unly snew.
When the birds of py their wings
Spread and go.
When of all there happy things Not one in our covert sings. May I know That thy acrong arm can sustain Sorrow's overwhelming strain? Will thou soothe me in my pain

With that sunny smile of thine. Lady mite! Wilt thou stand by one through shame, Lasly mint! Will thy steadfast laxing last Just the same, When the changing world shall cast Scern and blame

On my present and my past ! If its culumny shell blast Name and fome, Will thou lose thy loving pride ! Will then coldly turn saide, Half suspicious doubtful eyed? Or wilt trust the brighter shine, Ludy mine !

Will thou stund by one in death, Lady none! Will that strong heart never quail

When my breath And my dying pulses fail, And beneath Lies the dirk of death's cold vale,

Whose thick supers, damp and pale, Slowly wreathe Round my brow, thy dear face hiding Oh! wilt theu, with love abiding, Teach my woul thy own confiding ! Comfort me with hope divine, Lady mine?

Say, "Forerer I am thine,"

In blood of the dying sun.

At the cottage door the grandsire

Sits pale in his easy chair ;

While the gentle wind of twilight, Plays with his silver bair.

A woman is kneeling beside him,

A fair young head is pressed, In the first passion of sorrow, Against his aged breast.

And for from over the distance

The faltering echoes come.

"The end no man can see;

The violets star the meadows,

And over the grassy orchard

A pallid, tearless woman

By the cold hearth sits alone, And the old clock in the corner

Ticks on with a stendy drone.

But we gave him to his country,

The rose-bads fringe the door;

And the ratcling roll of drum.

And the grandsire speaks in a whisper-

And we give our prayers to thee,"

But the grandshire's chair is empty;

And a nameless one under the hill.
